TOPSY TUMBLE.

THE WAY THEY DIE IN JOHN BROWN ALLEY. She wasn't a bad sort of a girl for one who had been brought up in an alley all her days, living with old Mother Hart ever since she was large enough to gather chips around the abipsobody knew anything about her parents or relatives. Her hair was long and matted, her face tunned to a brown; her nose always born a stain of dirt, and she had stone-bruises on her feet, and chapped hands and sore heels, her feet, and chapped hands and sore beels, just like the rarged boys with whom she played. The "society" of the alley rather cut Topsy Tumble, but she was independent, and she made faces at "society" from the top of coal sheds, and allowed herself to be harnessed up beside Bob White, when the topsy wanted a blooded team to draw a cracking cart down around the railcoad crossing.

The alley was unusually quiet the other week. Topsy Tumble was sick. Mother Hart said so when Bob White went to see if Topsy wanted to trade her old jackinife for a small dog, which he had plaked up on Atwater street. It was a strange thing, her kiness. For clevent years she had rolled is the dirt, wadewthrough the sarw and spinshed around in the mind, and bobody had ever keard her complain of anything more than a studbed toe. Bob condon't make it out. He and Bill Davis and Same Sharp and Chip Lashins sat in the shade of a truck wagon going to decay and tailed it over. It would be hard on mother Hart to have sickness and bear a doctor's bill, and they wondered if Topsy would set wall in time to wendered if Topsy would set wall in time to wendered if Topsy would set wall in time to wendered if Topsy would set wall in time to wendered if Topsy would set wall in time to wendered if Topsy would set wall in time to wendered. ness and bear a doctor's bill, and they wondered if Topsy would get well in time to go with them the next work. The doctor sail it was a bad fever, and most of the folks in John Roown alloy called in to or the loss in soon shows they called in the say that they would sit up nights and do any-thing they could. Topsy was out of her head, talking strange things, and, after looking at her flushed face and listening to her matter-ings, Bob White called the boys together onon of a coal shed, and there was a lu-made no reply, and by and by they slid down one by one and went home. There was no more dog ighting in the alley—no pounding of fire alarms on the old steambost belier and then rushing the "manneen" up to the corner. Columbus Janes brought his rooster down and wanted to bet a kite that it could clean out any chicken th John Brown alley, but the boys had no cuthusiasm.

Topsy grew worse. The dortor called twice a day, but his medicines didn't touch the case, and he told Mother Hart that Topsy must die.

The old woman felt a little weak and her eyes grew misty. It had been a score of years since she had wept for grief, and she could not remember when she had thought of death. The neighbors came in, and they tip-tood pull of their lists and enter the house. Mother Hart motioned for them to take seats on the bench at the fast of the bed, and she whispered n a weak voice:

"Bob, I'm.afraid we're going to lose Topsy!"

Topsy was unconscious. The boys wondered at the pallor of her face and the whiteness of her hands, and they saw that her matted hair had been cut short. The women shed tears. Mother flart kept wiping her eyes on her apron, and the boys wondered if sitting there wasn't amenting like going to meeting. "She was a good girl, Topsy was," whispered one of the women. "And so willing to help her mother," said another.

And she stood up for John Brown alleytts added Bob White, a sob in his throat.

Darkness settled down and they almost lost of the babies fell salesp, and the mothers trotted them softly, and the boys almost desed as they sat crooked up on the bench. The shadows of night grew deeper, and the rattle of a truck going beans sounded painfully loud and harsh. Mother, Hart moyed softly over and lighted the little old lamp, and as abe, hald it up the weman said "poor dear!" and light the leaned over on Chip Larkins shouldar and sobbed about.

Toney Tumble was dead! Topsy Tumble was dead: The little soul, never w cars—never made better by a word about Heaven-never drinking in the knowledge that only the body dies—had crossed the dark valley alone, having only the tears and heartaches of the dwellers in John Brown alley to plead it's case with the angels.—Detroit Press.
